FRANK COLE HAS ACCIDENT.

Frank Cole, an employe of the Valley Supply Company, was severely injured at about 11:30 Monday morning, his right leg being badly crushed and broken near the ankle.

The accident occurred when Cole and another employe of this company were filling the large ice box of the Newberry Grocery Store, corner Maryland avenue and Fourth street. A large piece, weighing about 300 pounds, was hoisted several feet from the ground and was just ready to slide into the ice box when it slipped from the tongues. As it fell it struck Cole on the hip, knocking him down. As he fell he slipped and fell directly beneath the cake.

A physician was called and the broken member was attended to.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

In the case of Samuel Gompers, found guilty in the lower court and sentenced to a year's imprisonment for contempt of court, the supreme court of the United States rules that whereas Gompers was convicted on a civil charge, the lower court erred in inflicting any more severe punishment than a fine. He can be tried again but it seems unlikely that he will be.

In the Standard Oil case, wherein the company is charged with maintaining a conspiracy in restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Anti-trust law, the court decrees that the combination as existing must be dissolved within six months.

FORMER RESIDENT LOSES HOME AND CONTENTS BY FIRE.

Word has been received from Mr. E. K. Grant of Wasco that his home and contents were recently burned and his family narrowly escaped with their lives. Mr. Grant was formerly a resident here, contracting for some time and later holding a position with the Valley Lumber Co. He moved with his family a few months ago to Wasco where he entered into the farming business. The local lodge of Odd Fellows, of which Mr. Grant was a member, rendered immediate assistance, and the Rebeccas will also see that the family is made comfortable should there be any necessity for doing so.

The following Glendale ladies visited the convention of the Federation of Women's Clubs at Long Beach Monday last: Mesdames Rice, Wells, Church, Gridley, Newcomb and Sherer.

Department of Medical Temperance.

Alarmed at the number of deaths in different parts of the United States directly caused by the use of headache powders, Dr. Wiley, chief chemist of the department of agriculture, at Washington, D. C., has started an investigation. "Every powder made," he declares, "contains ingredients which are extremely dangerous, particularly to people suffering from weak hearts, containing large quantities of either acetanilide, phenacetin, antipyrin, or caffeine, all of which more or less affect the heart." Thus many good women refuse to take part in temperance work because they say they must use alcohol for their weak hearts. The belief in this necessity for alcohol is a relic of the days when there was no scientific knowledge of its nature and effects. The sense of relief to a weak heart following a dose of alcohol is now understood and the danger is emphasized by careful physicians. Dr. J. J. Ridge, who was for years connected with the London Temperance Hospital, says, "In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred a weak heart means indigestion, a large per cent of people overeat, and many eat when too tired. That "tired feeling" is more often due to errors in diet, and overeating than to overwork. We are children of disobedience to nature's laws. Alcohol will undoubtedly give temporary relief in these cases and that is where the mischief comes in. If the cause is some temporary error in diet the effect of alcohol may seem to help, the fact is, alcohol only hides the symptoms, it does not remove the cause. It even makes matters worse by leaving the nerves more impressionable after the effect has gone off. Alcohol has a narcotic (nerve deadening) action, so that the irritation of the nerves of the stomach and bowels is diminished, and the reflex action on the heart is lessened. The newer thought of this age regarding health should make people reticent about telling of weak hearts caused by indigestion. Indigestion can be avoided by abstinence from tea and coffee, and other drug poisons, by thoroughly chewing the ofod and by not overeating, or eating when very much fatigued. There is no real necessity for indigestion nor for its accompaniment, "a weak heart."

MAIDS AND MATRONS.

Monday afternoon the Country Club was again the scene of an unqualified social success. The day was in charge of Mrs. Albert Dow of Orange street, who presided charmingly as hostess of the occasion.

The entire decorative scene was carried out in banks of roses and ferns, the club parlors presenting an especially pretty effect.

The afternoon was devoted mainly to a musical program which was carried out in a quaint and unusual manner, consisting principally of Hydris "Kinder Symphony." An orchestra was composed of Julius Kranz, Rachel McClure, Eleanor Clemons and Mrs. J. J. Nesom, violins; Mrs. C. O. Pulliam and Miss Emma Pulliam, pianists; Miss Myrtle Pulliam, trumpet; Dana Burket, cello; Eleanor Richards, cocoo; May Richards, rattle; Viola Yorba, tamborine; Dorothy Dow, quail, and Miss Bertha Peterson, nightingale. The participants were all costumed as little children and their appearance as well as the program rendered won universal applause. Miss Emma Williams was the very able and proficient conductress of this part of the program. Mrs. Albert Dow sang the spring song and was encored and re-encored until she favored those present with two other selections, which were the "Bird and the Rose" and "The Slumber Islands." Mrs. S. H. Garrett, a reader of unusual ability, gave several well received selections.

After the program tea was served in the dining room, when eight tables were set. Each table had a center piece of long stemmed pink cochet roses which were thrown losely on the cloth and each place was also marked with a rose.

A pleasant social hour closed the afternoon.

CONTRACT SIGNED FOR BURBANK ELECTRIC LINE.

A contract for the extension of the Pacific Electric's Glendale line between that city and Burbank has been let to Robert Sherer & Co. The distance is four miles. Cinstruction of the line will be begun at once and completed in six months. Residents of Burbank will give the Pacific Electric a bonus of $40,000.—Express.

SNAKES.

Mr. W. T. Johnson of La Crescenta found a rattlesnake in the road just outside of Crescenta the other day and promptly put an end to it with his gun. It had seven rattles. He killed another some time ago in that section which had 12 rattles and a button, which shows that 13 is unlucky for snakes.

A GREAT SUCCESS

Glendale's Second May Festival Draws a Crowd—Program Goes Through Smoothly and Everybody Happy

The weather department sent an ideal day. The Pacific Electric hauled out the crowds, the program moved along smoothly, nobody went away hungry and altogether Glendale has cause to be proud of the success of its second annual Mid-May festival and satisfied with it as an excellent advertisement.

The people began to come in on the cars about nine o'clock and from that time until about one the cars were crowded. As they alighted from the cars at Fourth and Brand they were presented with copies of the program and of the GLENDALE NEWS special edition. A large number of folders descriptive of Glendale, prepared for the Improvement Association were also distributed during the day. One enterprising individual from Los Angeles attempted to sell programs for five cents apiece but the authorities got after him and after that it was understood that everything of the kind was free to all.

Mr. F. J. Showalter, chairman of the transportation committee proved to be the right man for the job and although it was impossible to give everybody a free ride, a large proportion of the visitors enjoyed this treat. The route followed took in both sides of town, being carefully selected with a view to giving visitors a fair impression of the city. The commitee had secured a large automobile truck with a trailer accomodating about forty passengers, and this with Mr. Wm. Woods as chauffeur, was kept busy most of the day. Mr. Coker of the Valley Lumber Co., Mr. Allen of the Allen Hardware Company, Mr. Hinckley of the Glendale Hardware Co., the Overton Realty Co., Mr. Busch of the Glendale Theater and about twenty others whom it is impossible to name, gave the use of their autos and kept them moving almost all day.

THE BARBECUE.

The principal interest of the day centered in the barbecue. This was in charge of the barbecue committee, Mr. McKee, chairman. Mr. R. G. Doyle, a former resident of Glendale and an expert at the barbecue business, had kindly volunteered his services and after his arrival on the grounds Tuesday afternoon, directed operations. Two thousand pounds of beef had been secured and although every visitor seems to have received a fair portion accompanied by bread, beans, pickles and to the first comers, coffee, the supply ran out all too soon for the satisfaction of the repeaters, principally small boys. The manner of cooking the beef by the barbecue process is sufficiently interesting to merit a brief description here. In this case three pits were prepared, one large and two small ones, the largest about six by eight, the smaller half that size. A cord or more of the best wood was burned in the pits, the fire being started Tuesday afternoon. After this had thoroughly burned down to coals, the meat in ten-pound rolls wrapped in wet cloth was put in and the pits tightly sealed, not being opened until the people were ready to be served. Care has to be exercised in opening the pits so as to avoid the breaking out of a blaze which would burn the meat. The feast began about noon and was over by 2:30, the time that the sports were scheduled to begin. The arrangements for handling the crowd were very good, although at first the crush was something of famine times and the bread line. The enclosure was commodious, there being ample table room, the principal trouble being to keep the people moving, as all had to pass along a narrow passage way, cafeteria style, the plate of victuals being served first and then the coffee, but before the meat was half gone the supply of coffee was exhausted.

The whole structure was covered by a roof thatched thinly with willows, affording protection from the rays of the sun as well as adding to the general picknicky effect. Mr. H. D. Brown was chairman of the building committee and was very ably assisted by Trustees W. A. Anderson who devoted a good portion of two or three days to the work. In serving the meal Mr. McKee had a lot of willing assistants decked out in white caps and aprons so that the patrons had no cause to complain of slow service. Mr. C. O. Pulliam, chairman of the finance committee, not only performed well the duties of that position, but kept moving things in other directions also.

Personal and Otherwise.

A number of people who had resided in Glendale in years past but now live in Los Angeles and elsewhere, seized the opportunity to revisit the city which in the case of many of them, has grown beyond their recognition. Among such the reporter noticed the following: Rev. R. Dodd, for several years pastor of the Presbyterian church here, now a resident of Los Angeles. Mrs. Henry Goode, who resided on what is now known as the Haines property (recently sold) on Verdugo Road, now a resident of Long Beach. Mr. C. Martin, former owner of the Spencer Robinson place on Ninth street. Miss Hueston, whose father was postmaster at Verdugo, a dozen years ago. George W. Benson who has but recently left Glendale, was out in a brand new automobile with his family. W. E. Cooley of Pasadena, an old-timer in Pasadena and father of Mrs. F. L. Church, was here enjoying the occasion. Altogether it was a class of visitors that will be likely to look further into the merits of a place which will bear watching. Many of them were business men from Los Angeles who had not been in Glendale before, but having heard of it took advantage of the occasion to make its acquaintance. A load of Chicago people passing through from Pasadena, stopped to inquire as to the cause of the festivity and went away loaded with information. The city of Alhambra was officially represented by three of the members of its board of trustees, Messrs. R. M. Wallace, G. W. Cameron, and A. C. Weeks. Accompanying them were Messrs. Jas. McLaren, R. H. Blackidge and R. M. Woolpert, the latter Alhambra's building inspector. They traveled in the city's automobile.

The Decorations.

The city was in festive attire, of course. The decorations of the streets under the direction of Mr. Harry Lynch, was artistic and beautiful, the work being done by the Hoegee Company of Los Angeles. This firm also did most of the decorating of business establishments and many private residences, although some owners did their own work. From the McIntyre block east of Glendale avenue on Fourth street to Brand boulevard and along Brand boulevard to Third street, and on Glendale avenue from Fourth to Third street, the decorations were on practically every business establishment. One of the most striking of the various establishments was that of the Glendale Dye Works, Mr. H. M. Merrill on Brand boulevard. In a small booth standing on the sidewalk, the structure decorated with bunting and flowers, little Miss Mildred McKee represented California for a considerable portion of the forenoon and all comers were presented with a carnation. The exhibition attracted a crowd until the time for the barbecue.

GLENDALE, CAL., MAY 19, 1911

New York leads all other states in the number of automobiles registered, having about 70,000. Pennsylvania and California come next, each with 40,000.

The governor of New Jersey has visited Los Angeles and departed. Woodrow Wilson is a large man and will bear watching. And, by the way, he does not believe in applying the recall to the judiciary.

The initiative, referendum, recall and a few more "progressive" notions are now in effect in all the cities of California. Will the citizens please get out their little petitions and stir up the animals.

Have you read "The Cash Intrigue?" We tried to supply our readers with a thriller and seem not to have made a mistake. The business office receives subscriptions and can sell you back numbers.

The Supreme Court has decided that Gompers, although guilty of contempt, need not go to jail. Let us recall the Supreme Court judges! But hold, they have hit Standard Oil a body blow. Let them continue until we again disapprove of them!

There is a rumor around town to the effect that a number of our friends borrow the NEWS regularly from a neighbor—this is wrong—they should form a GLENDALE NEWS READING CLUB, subscribe for a copy and levy an assessment. The paper costs twelve and a half cents a month.

Editor Randall of the Artesia News advises the people not to buy things of strangers. The advice is good, but it will not be followed. The chances are that in Artesia as in other towns the glib-tongued stranger can sell gold bricks to the merchants who would turn a fellow townsman down cold.

Ex-Queen Alexandra is reported as having said in reference to Queen Mary's efforts to effect a dress reform: "If she can stop excessive extravagance in dress it will be a good thing for everybody. But she might as well try to dictate what women shall think as what they shall wear." Which shows that she is a lady of excellent judgment and knows something of feminine human nature.

Our people are no doubt glad to see a force of men at work clearing the parkways of weeds; presumably one of the good results of our mid-May Festival. It is evidence also of the fact that we have a street department, which some people, particularly in the neighborhood of Verdugo road, are beginning to doubt. It is high time for the water wagon to begin its perambulations.

Mr. Wilkinson of Minnesota declares that reciprocity with Canada will cost the farmers of the Northwest $40,000,000 a year. If the income of these farmers is decreased forty millions, they will probably be unable to buy so many automobiles as they do now, but will probably still be able to keep out of the poor house. As a matter of fact the farmers in the last few years have been doing better from a worldly point of view, than any other class of citizens, taking them as a whole. There are a good many thousands of people in the consumer's class that will appreciate the chance of getting a little of that forty millions. The great middle class, the laborers on salary, deserve consideration as much as does the farmer or the unskilled laborer and possibly a slight reduction of the farmers' profits might not come amiss to them.

A QUIET SESSION.

The present extra session of congress is attracting less notice from the public than the meetings of the national legislature usually receives. There are other matters pending which are to the people at large of greater imporatnce than the action of congress at this time. Aside from the question of the ratification of the Canadian reciprocity treaty, there is not much probability of congress doing anything of importance at this session. And even that question is of comparatively little importance compared with the action of the Supreme Court or any one of three or four matters now before that tribunal. It is due no doubt to the fact that other matters are dominating the public mind just now, that the congressional proceedings comprise such a small portion of the space in the newspapers.

The trouble in Mexico is now a matter of paramount importance to the people of the United States and between the accounts of the day's doings in our sister republic (in name anyhow) to the southward, and the proceedings in Congress, there is not much hesitancy in making a choice.

RECALL NOW EFFECTIVE.

One of the numerous beneficial bills which Governor Johnson did not fail to sign was that law fathered by Assemblyman Hinshaw, conferring the power on cities of the sixth class of recalling any or all elective city officials. The bill was passed March 19, and because a law April 9, when Governor Johnson affixed his signature.

By this law the voters of any city of the sixth class may, by presenting a petition for the recall of any city official signed by thirty per cent of the voters at the last municipal election, request the board of city trustees of these cities to call an election for voting on the recall and also for voting on a proposed successor in the office.

Only one official can be named for recall on each petition, but one election may determine the recall or retention of any number of officials, one petition being submitted for each.

It is obligatory upon boards of trustees and upon city councils to first determine whether there are enough real voters on the petition or petitions and then call an election to vote on the recall and the naming of successors. Sixty days are allowed the boards to make the election call, which election must ensue within thirty days.

If the office holder named in each recall petition fails to get as many votes as his proposed successor, named on the ballot, that official's term of office immediately is ended, and the new official takes the vacant position.—So. Pac. Record.

THE INDEPENDENCE OF SENATOR WORKS.

Because Senator John D. Works has announced that he intends to vote for Canadian reciprocity and a reduction of the tariff on manufactured goods, he is violently attacked by the Los Angeles Times, in a manner that reflects a curious kind of morality in the composition of the author of the article. The NEWS has not been a supporter of Senator Works and believes that the less his friends have to say about the manner in which his election was secured, the better it will be for their pretentions as "reformers."

But if Senator Works adheres to his declaration that he will as a senator of the United States refuse to "swap" his vote and support measures he does not approve of in order to receive legislative favors for his constituents, we shall heartily hail him as an honest man and as a senator possessing qualities better fitting him for a national position than any of the numerous mediocre men whom California has honored with the toga. The position of Senator Works in reference to tariff legislation is sane and honorable. What does it matter if "the practice (of trading) has prevailed for three-quarters of a century;" must a man in public life sacrifice his sense of right simply because James G. Blaine and a lot of other public men in times past have done it? Why elect a man to represent the state in the national legislature, if his whole duty is to obey the behest of a chamber of commerce? It would be much simpler, more honest, and far more economical to have the secretary of the organization write out the wishes of the august body or possibly spend a dollar or two in telegraphing them to Washington! The critic of the senator figures it out that his action in supporting the reciprocity bill is liable to cost California something like five millions of dollars, for it will take the tariff off barley!

Further than that, if he remains an honest man and will not vote as "the interests" dictate, his action is likely to cost the citrus fruit growers of California about twenty-six millions! All of this is dreadful if true. There are several reasons for refusing to believe that we must pay quite so much as this for the honor of having a representative in the United States senate who will not favor what he considers an unnecessary tariff on New England manufactures, for the sake of securing what he considers a necessary one on the products of California. In the first place, the prospect for having the tariff taken off citrus fruits is exceedingly remote; possibly it may be reduced, but if it is, there will still be enough left. The tariff did not build up the California citrus fruit industry and a slight reduction in it will not result in the cutting down of the trees in our orchards. The free traders in congress are in the minority. Every Republican there is a protectionist and a large proportion of the Democrats when it comes down to business. The Republican platform has declared for a tariff, the measure of which shall be the dieffrence in the cost of production at home and abroad. It is a little indefinite, but it is sufficient; it ought to satisfy every fair-minded American. In the second place, Senator Works is not the only representative of California in the senate; we still have a chamber of commerce statesman there in the person of George C. Perkins; whose ear is always to the ground and who would not think of doing anything against the wishes of his constituents, even though he might, if judging the matter independently, consider it wrong! So in the end Perkins will offset Works, and Mr. Aldrich (his successor rather) will have to concede at least fifty per cents worth to the wishes of California chambers of commerce.

When we think of our having been represented in the upper house by so complaisant and successful a trader as Senator Flint, we imagine that Mr. Works will jar things up considerably if he follows out his program. To his backbone strength!

TO BOOM SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

One of the greatest movements ever started for attracting Eastern people to Southern California is that of D. C. Collier, of San Diego, director-general of the Panama-Pacific Exposition to be held in that city in 1915.

Collier has been touring the South. He made an address at Atlanta, one at New Orleans, from which city the movement was started, one at Dallas, Texas, one at Little Rock, one at Memphis, and one at St. Louis, on the subject—the routing of west-bound traffic through the South.

Nineteen-twentieths of all the Western travel is by Northern roads. The great South, with a half dozen trunk lines, has been neglected as far as routing of west-bound passengers is concerned. Collier, in conjunction with New Orleans business men, who are to hold a Panama Exposition in 1913, has succeeded in calling the attention of the entire South to the matter, and every commercial body in the cities of the South is now busy with the big railroads trying to route all passenger traffic through the South. At the same time they are busy advertising the charms of travel in California in every portion of the South. The benefits that will be derived from this movement by Southern California are incalculable, for the movement will grow with each small success. With every city in the South boosting for California at all times in their efforts to attract travel through their states, California will have annexed almost one-third of the United States as an active advertising adjunct. It is not too much to say that the South will send a million people to California in 1915 to see first the Panama-California Exposition at San Diego, then go north to see the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, and return home by one of the Northern railroad routes. The newspapers of the South have taken up the idea and are giving it columns of space, consolidating the movement and fully alive to the possibilities.

EXPANDING FAST.

No part of the city's rim is expanding faster than the section to the north and northwest and Glendale way the advance cityward is almost if not quite as noticeable. The filling up of the lower San Fernando Valley to span the gap between the city and the rapidly developing empire of the valley proper is one of the most significant and noteworthy of all the steps in the mountain-to-the-sea development. Toward Pasadena the progress is appreciated almost from month to month.

Perhaps the most significant of all the recent development, however, is that taking place against the foothills far to the north. New townsites of large proportions are being laid out in both the Crescenta and the Canyada sections and all the lands in these vicinities are being prepared for compact settlement. Where today a few little villages share with the occasional foothill estate of some wealthy man a scenic charm unsurpassed in the Southland there is being definitely projected a development that will not stop short of a splendid urban community sharing with the city every advantage of metropolitan life. There promises soon to be a building boom comparable even with that to the north of Pasadena, where the mountains themselves are encroached upon. —L. A. Times.

THE WATER QUESTION

A Los Angeles Engineer's Opinion—Owens River Will Not Affect Value of Local Supply

On the request of Mr. M. A. King who is a director in the Verdugo Pipe and Reservoir Co., Mr. Arthur L. Sonderegger, an engineer of high standing, who is recommended by Supt. Mulholland of the Los Angeles Water Co., has made a report on the water question after looking over the situation here, which contains valuable suggestions. The principal features of the report appear herewith.

The remainder of the report is devoted to matters pertaining to the local company addressed.

The suggestion of Mr. Sonderegger for the consolidation of the local companies is based upon reasons which appeal to good business principles. All of the local companies will need from this time on to make improvements in their plants, both as to reservoirs and distributing systems, and the work can be done much better and more economically if they work together.

This need not mean a consolidation of interests except as applies to the work to be done. There is one distributing company, for instance, that has no reservoir, but distributes direct from its pipe line; another company needs a reservoir on higher ground to supply foothill consumers and it should be practicable to make one reservoir supply the requirements of both companies.

Mr. Sonderegger's report shows that there is nothing cheap about Owens river water. Fifteen hundred dollars an inch is a good price for this necessary commodity. His idea seems to be that the water will be distributed by the city of Los Angeles direct to the consumer instead of being leased or sold to a community that will have to furnish its own distributing system; but as he says these matters are yet "under consideration."

Los Angeles, Cal., May 1st, 1911.
Mr. M. A. King, Glendale, Cal.
Dear Sir:

As per your request, I beg to submit in the following a brief report on the question of improvements to the water system of the Verdugo Pipe and Reservoir Company.

I am informed that the Verdugo Pipe and Reservoir Company is one of five or six companies which obtain water from the Verdugo Water Company, distributing the same in Glendale and vicinity. The total output from the canyon I understand to be something over 200 inches, in addition to which the various water companies develop water by pumping during the summer months. Generally speaking, the total quantity of water thus obtained is not sufficient to irrigate all of the lands that form the Glendale district, nor will the supply be ample to provide for a rapidly growing population.

There is no doubt but that the advent of the Owens River water will find a strong demand in the Glendale country. The Los Angeles Aqueduct water would probably reach Glendale in a conduit skirting the foothills to the north. Since the law will not permit the sale of aqueduct water to private companies, we must expect that the distribution will be controlled by the City of Los Angeles. This will have to be done under a general plan covering the entire district. It would be impracticable, in laying out such a distributing system, to consider the systems of the various local water companies. The city has so far positively refused to commit itself to acquire any kind of existing water system, no matter how permanent the character of the improvements may be. In view of this, I believe it would not be wise for any one of the Glendale companies to go into large expenditures in the construction of a new distributing system.

On the other hand, the advent of the Owens River water will not impair the value of the water rights now owned by the various companies. Water will always be at a premium in Southern California; the cost to the City of Los Angeles of Owens River water at Glendale is apt to be over $1500.00 per miner's inch. The approximate value of the water rights owned by the stockholders of the Verdugo Pipe & Reservoir Company, I estimate to be in the neighborhood of $40,000.00, and the value of the whole system at approximately $50,000.00.

In order to guarantee the interests of the water companies and to make the best of the new order of things that will be created through the invasion of Owens River water, steps might be taken for the combining of the local plants. The problem of distributing the Owens River water is now under consideration by the engineers of the aqueduct, and Owens River water will be available for Glendale and vicinity within two or three years.

Mrs. W. W. Burford of 740 Glendale avenue went to a Los Angeles hospital Monday last to have a surgical operation performed.

MONTHLY BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY CALIFORNIA DEVELOPMENT BOARD, APRIL 30, 1911.

By Prof. A. G. McAdie, U. S. W. Bureau.

SNOWFALL IN THE MOUNTAINS.

"April was a cool month and with much less precipitation than usually occurs. With the exception of light showers at the beginning of the month, there was little precipitation. The snow cover, which was unusually deep at the beginning of the month, increased slowly until about the 12th and then steadily diminished, until at the end of the month there was only about one-half the depth on the ground at the end of the first decade. At an elevation of about 7000 feet there is now about eight feet of snow, well packed and melting at a fairly uniform rate of about four inches per day. There is every prospect of an abundant suply of water during the summer months, sufficient for irrigation, stock, mining and power operations.

"The season probably will be a late one, quite different from that of the earliest on record.

Frost.

"The season has been as a whole remarkably free from frosts. From April 12th to 15th late spring frosts occurred in almost all the fruit sections of California. Grapes suffered the greatest loss. Tree fruits were not badly injured."

The frost was hurtful in certain low lands, but not so much in the foothills; grapes suffered, especially in Fresno and Lodi districts, but growers claim that the short crop will be offset by better prices. Some varieties will produce a second crop. Peaches and apricots also suffered in some localities; pears not so much.

Cereals and hay promise well; in some counties a large crop. Over 1000 carloads of asparagus have been shipped from Stockton since March 1st; large new plantings are being made.

First cherry shipment, April 18th, from Courtland, brought record price in the East.

A number of new canneries are to be started to handle the fruit and vegetable crops of the season.

Acreage of sugar beets much enlarged. One new plant in Los Angeles county and two in Orange will operate next season.

Walnuts will make a good yield, while almonds will be short in some counties.

Dairy and poultry industries are thriving; a number of new creameries have been established.

Citrus shipments lead those to same date of last season by nearly 8000 cars. Southern California reports the best crop in years. Kern county reports planting 100,000 new citrus trees.

Transportation facilities are being extended on every hand.

Manufacturing, municipal improvements, public and private building are very active.

University of California has set aside $300,000 for building operations.

A $300,000 ramie factory is projected in Sacramento county; a large veneering mill at Peperwood, Humboldt county; $200,000 addition to State Normal school, San Jose; State Armory and Arsenal at Sacramento; hotels, schools and churches in various towns, and a large number of new residences are being built.

State Mineralogist Aubury reports the mineral production of the state at $90,000,000, and estimates $100,000,000 for 1911.

Oil and mining developments are very active; new wells are being brought in and the production keeps up well. Mining has taken a new impetus on justifying prospects.

Hydro-electric power is being added to and several new lighting projects are under way.

Many land sales for subdivision are being made to capitalists from the East, Los Angeles, San Francisco, etc., and colonization work promises much activity.

The people generally are pleased with the outlook for the year.

The secretary of state reports 1433 new registrations of motor vehicles for the month of March.

The Panama-Pacific International Exposition will be held in San Francisco in 1915.

The Panama-California Exposition will be held in San Diego in 1915.

Curiosities of Etymology.

It is extraordinary how words for the same thing differ in even so small a country as England. Take "left handed," for example. In Gloucestershire such a person is described as "scrammy," in Staffordshire he becomes "craggy," the phrase for a left handed Yorkshireman is "gawkrodger" or "callick handed," and in the next county, Durham, he is "cuddy paw."—London Telegraph.

Going Too Far.

Along a country road walked a man and woman. The latter, a gaunt, stern faced female, was bullying the meek little fellow, who trudged just in front of her with downcast head. Suddenly the woman, turning, saw a bull racing down the road behind them. She quickly took refuge in the hedge, but her companion, unconscious of aught but his woes, kept on his way. The bull caught up to him and sent him spinning into a muddy ditch, then continued on its wild career. As the woebegone figure crawled out of the mire he saw his better half coming toward him. Plucking up a little spirit, he whimpered, "M-M-Maria, if you hit me like that a-g-g-gain you'll really get my temper up, so I warn you."

More and More.

The gravedigger in "Hamlet" was a very witty man, wittier far than many of the epitaph makers who have adorned headstones with their jingles. A sample of the punning rhymes which are cut on tombs follows. It comes from the grave of William More, at Stepney, near London:

Here lies one More, and no more than he.
The More and no more—how can that be?
Why, one More and no more may lie here alone,
But here lies one More, and that's more than one.

THE CASH INTRIGUE

CHAPTER V.

A QUEER thought came to Pellman that there in that unlovely sphere of bone lay a few ounces of brain that had built up the most colossal fortune in the world, that held subject to its whim the destinies not only of the 10,000,000 human beings directly or indirectly employed by him, but now in this extremity the destinies of 90,000,000 of people! Pellman was far-seeing. If this calamity could not be nipped in the bud it was likely to be felt all over the world. And one man could do it, could this very day make or mar fortunes, promote or destroy commerce, prolong or end lives. And one man could do it! It was too much power.

"Breed!" commanded Pellman sharply.

The owner of countless millions looked around at him almost vacantly, but before he could reply, had he been minded to do so, a tall, gaunt man with protruding cheek bones and bristling red hair and a drooping sandy mustache came in with a slip of yellow paper in his hand. He glanced at Pellman inquiringly, and a gleam of recognition flashed upon his countenance, although Pellman could have sworn that he had never seen the man before. For only an instant the man's gaze swept Pellman. Then he advanced to Breed.

"A wireless for you, sir," said he in a voice of so deep a range that it seemed to jar all the air in the room and set it quivering.

Breed glanced at the message almost indifferently and handed it back. "Tell him that there is to be no compromise with that firm, Blagg," he directed.

The wireless operator smiled grimly and turned away. As he started out the door the young woman Pellman had seen in the hall came in, accompanied by an elder woman. Pellman saw Blagg's eyes flame as they rested on the girl, and the man turned to look after her to the last as he closed the door.

The elder woman was rather stout, with her head thrown back in a general attitude of contempt. Pellman remembered her vaguely as a Mrs. Rensselaer, one of the long since impoverished exclusives of old Manhattan, but still a power in the inner circles, and he idly wondered what she could be doing here. The girl came and stood behind Breed's chair, her hand resting lightly upon his shoulder, and stared at Pellman with frank impertinence. Her attitude angered him.

"Breed!" he again commanded sharply.

"Well?" asked Breed apathetically.

"You must listen to me," insisted Pellman. "Half a dozen times under emergency you have come to the front and helped to smooth things out. Once you even saved the government. Now we have a worse condition than any that has ever confronted us. The whole country is going to smash. The Stock Exchange will be swept out of existence before the week's end. There will be more bank failures than have ever occurred in the United States in any one year. Breed, you must do something. I am not going away from here until you do. Call off your absurd cash drain, announce it to the public and go with us to bolster up the market."

Breed looked around him slowly, and his eye caught that of Dr. Zelphan. "Take me away," said he. "I am tired. Lillian!"

Zelphan stepped immediately to his side, took his arm and started toward the door on the other side of the fireplace, the girl supporting his other arm.

"Wait!" almost shrieked Pellman. "You are not so ill that you cannot talk this matter over. You were well enough just now to put the screws on some concern unlucky enough to be under your thumb. Listen to me!"

Breed only hastened his shuffling footsteps. Pellman strode after them, but just as they reached the door Dr. Zelphan opened it, and the girl cast back at Pellman a glance of derision from her dark eyes. She took Breed into the room beyond, and as the door closed behind her she laughed an insolent laugh of amusement.

Zelphan stood before the door. "I told you just how it would be," he declared. "The man is in no condition to talk business and must not be bothered again."

Pellman left the house fuming, and his ill humor was in no degree lessened when he saw two figures crossing the glade armed with golf sticks. They were some distance away, but he was sure they were the doctor and Henry Breed.

Overnight, merely from the impetus of their descent, stocks went down not less than fifteen points. Every newspaper in the United States fairly dripped with sensational stories based upon the fact that there was no money in circulation. Banks guarded their cash reserves with a life and death desperation. Men who had been about to pay small bills kept the money in their pockets, and a universal stagnation set in. In another day arrangements were made in a dozen cities to issue clearing house certificates to take the place of money. In the meantime pandemonium had foreclosed its long overdue mortgage upon the New York Stock Exchange.

Pellman that day sat in his office until nearly 11 o'clock, receiving by telephone the reports of the slaughter. Suddenly he found that he had no friends of influence. Two days before he could have secured almost unlimited backing; today no one had money, and there was no such thing in existence as a negotiable security. Only one thing could help him—a restoration of the public confidence and a consequent immediate recovery in the price of stocks; and this only one thing could bring about—an announcement by Breed that no more cash would be withdrawn from circulation, and that some of that already retired would be put back into the active channels of trade. He hurried over to the New Jersey offices of the United Food company. He found Ashburn in his private office, watching the ticker ribbon with much interest, but before they had even exchanged greetings he himself hurried to the tape and read with his own eyes the appalling record of the devastation that had occurred within the last hour. Pellman was a heavy holder of Northern Pacific, and as his eyes glanced over the tape it ticked off the latest quotation on that stock at a price so absurdly low that he fairly shrieked at Ashburn across the white ribbon.

"WAIT!" ALMOST SHRIEKED PELLMAN.

"You people are responsible for this!"

"Pretty clever work," commented Ashburn. "Three months ago I began selling short and now I am closing up. The market is bound to go lower, but there will be no chance to get the money when it goes there. Look at this!"

A long sentence was being spelled out on the tape: "Wilson & Woodruff admit bankruptcy."

"It is beginning already," said Ashburn. He looked up at Pellman. The face of the latter had turned suddenly to a ghastly greenish pallor. "What's the matter?" Ashburn asked.

"Wilson & Woodruff!" gasped Pellman. "We are bound up with them, owing to some recent deals, like Siamese twins." Pellman's hands were nervously groping from pocket to pocket.

"I was afraid of it," he said huskily, then suddenly flared out again. "You fellows have done this, I tell you!"

"No doubt we precipitated the break at this particular moment," agreed Ashburn, "but you and your kind are responsible for the break itself. It was bound to come, for Wall street is diseased. This thing will turn out right, Pellman. In the end you will find it to have been good medicine for business at large."

"To hades with business at large!" exclaimed the other, grown vicious in his big rage. "What do I care for business at large if I go bankrupt? When are you going to stop this infernal massacre?".

"I don't know," said Ashburn calmly. "Orders do not come directly from me. They merely go through me."

"They come from Forest Lakes," asserted Pellman. Ashburn only smiled.

"You're actually gloating over it!" charged Pellman, white with anger. "The whole thing is a carefully made panic by which Breed and you head bakers of his profit. Well, there are ways to make you do something, and I intend to evoke them."

Ashburn shrugged his shoulders. "Go ahead and evoke," he invited. "In the meantime I would like to call your attention to the beautiful little fact that I have personally cleaned up over $1,000,000 in the past week, and I stand to make another handsome profit if all you manipulators don't go to pieces before I can collect it."

Pellman returned again and again to the attack, but finally was compelled to give up in despair. As he walked away he was impeded by two men carrying an iron bound wooden packing case, and his eye mechanically noticed that there was a cut in the edge of one of the sheet iron bands, the point of this cut turning up in an ugly fashion. He called up Henry Galleon to find out the status of his affairs there. Mr. Galleon was very cold about it.

"I must have more margin at once to protect your purchases," he declared. "Your balance with me is now less than $50,000, and it will be wiped out in an hour unless you send me a check."

"Who is my principal creditor?" asked Pellman.

"Young Kelvin. He has been buying outright all day and demanding absolute delivery of stock. I think it is his intention to force delivery upon all purchasers to whom he has previously sold."

"Where is he to be found?"

"In his apartments at the Esplanade," replied Galleon.

Pellman hung up the receiver and hurried over to the apartments of young Kelvin. He found Phillip checking off certain items from a thick pile of memorandum slips. Seen here, he suddenly looked ageless. Pellman had given him credit only for youth and consequent inexperience. He moistened his lips before he spoke.

"I understand you sold me 10,000 shares of N. P.," he said.

Kelvin consulted a card index and nodded his head. "Yes," he replied. "Through Henry Galleon & Co."

"If you force delivery on that stock," said Pellman, "I can't save breakfast money out of my operations in Galleon's office. I have come to ask of you a big favor. Let me close that deal now; let me give you my note for the difference between selling price and present market price, you to hold the stock as security."

"Impossible, Mr. Pellman," Kelvin announced. "No compromise can be made on this stock. I have just purchased for spot cash 10,000 shares of N. P. at sixty-four. You purchased from me at 128. You must take the stock at that figure and you can sell it for sixty-four if you hurry. Or I will keep the stock and you can pay me the difference in cash."

"I can't possibly do it," said Pellman.

"I can't possibly do anything else," replied Phillip dryly.

Pellman, desperate to try some other means of protecting himself, was turning away when two men came into the room with a small wooden packing case bound with sheet iron. Pellman might not have noticed this circumstance but for his recognition of the men. His eye for smaller detail saw a cut upon one of the sheet iron bands and an ugly upturned corner.

"Now I understand," he said. "I see how you came to be called the 'Cash Bear.' That box is full of money collected by Breed's company and furnished to you to conduct this campaign. We in the financial field should have known what you were. You are Breed's puppet!"

Kelvin looked at him calmly. "I cannot prevent you from supposing anything you like, Mr. Pellman, but I would like to impress upon you the fact that I am very busy."

"Dangling and dancing upon the strings that Breed pulls!" declared Pellman with hot contempt.

Kelvin smiled aggravatingly. "It seems to me that you, too, are dangling and dancing upon the strings that Mr. Breed pulls," he charged with cool insolence. "But you might as well calm down, for since you have been talking to me your firm has been announced as bankrupt."

"It's a lie!" declared Pellman, though he knew in his heart that it was true.

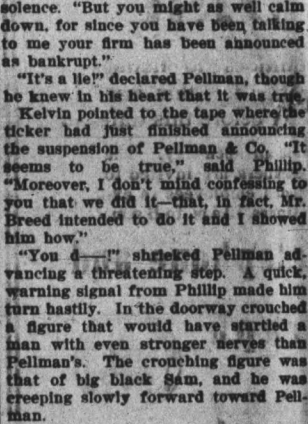
Kelvin pointed to the tape where the ticker had just finished announcing the suspension of Pellman & Co. "It seems to be true," said Phillip. "Moreover, I don't mind confessing to you that we did it—that, in fact, Mr. Breed intended to do it and I showed him how."

"You d——!" shrieked Pellman advancing a threatening step. A quick, warning signal from Phillip made him turn hastily. In the doorway crouched a figure that would have startled a man with even stronger nerves than Pellman's. The crouching figure was that of big black Sam, and he was creeping slowly forward toward Pellman.

"You'd better leave, Pellman," said Phillip. "You're the man that broke my father."

Wall street was quite used to panics, in fact it had been in the business of making them, but here was one that had been made entirely outside of its calculation and it did not know what to do with the creature. Every day, in every city and village throughout the land where Breed had established his thousands of bread depots, was still that steady drain which had, in the first place, caused the disruption of the financial system. Breed, as a retail merchant, had a perfectly legal right to demand cash for his commodities and he could not be stopped from collecting it.

On the day that Pellman went under there were half a dozen other failures, and this was but the beginning of terror filled days, each with a more and more dismal history. Throughout the country banks were breaking and business houses were going down with them. Factories were suspending and chaos reigned everywhere. It was a hideous object lesson in business methods. The entire boasted "prosperity" of the country had been built upon nothing more substantial than universal credit, which was, in closer [illegible] universal confidence. This destroyed, by a breath credit was destroyed and a whole nation of people was forced into immediate idleness and want because its machinery for exchanging the product of its labor for the product of other labor had developed a broken cog.



"YOU'RE THE MAN THAT BROKE MY FATHER."

CHAPTER VI.

AS usual, it was the poor that suffered quickest and most. Phillip on a day especially prolific of new champagne fed paupers was surprised to receive a visit from Elsie White. She was pale and nervous. Much worry had caused her to lose sleep.

"I have come to tell you my troubles, as I have always done," she said.

"Let's hear all about it," invited Phillip cordially. "I don't think my little sister ever came to me in the old days that I didn't help her out of her difficulties if possible."

"Indeed, no," she said gratefully. "You were the finest sort of big brother."

She lingered a trifle upon that word, unconsciously emphasizing it ever so slightly. Phillip outwardly accepted the word as a pleasant expression of confidence. Inwardly he winced at it.

"Who has broken your doll this time?" he asked, with a smile.

"It is worse than a broken doll," she said. "When you were in Hampton you spoke about securing employment for father."

"I have thought about it a great many times," Phillip replied, "but outside of his trade he has so little adaptability that I could not think of a place for him."

Again Elsie clasped her hands and plunged heroically into her errand.

"He must be put in a position to earn some money. We are really in a desperate condition, Phillip. Yesterday we received notice that we must give up our home, and we must move out by Saturday. We shall lose our furniture at the same time. Until recently we had credit at the butcher's and the grocer's, but that has been cut off. Grace's husband is wandering somewhere out west penniless and hunting for work, and Grace and her two little children have come to us at a time when we can do nothing for them, yet they are ours, and we must take care of them. Grace is not strong. Of the seven of us in the house only father and I are physically able to earn a living. The time has come when we must find work."

She did not tell him of their actual hunger, but Phillip, looking at her drawn face, could guess and was shocked. He longed to take her in his arms and comfort her, but he did not.

"Really, Elsie, I didn't know, I couldn't believe, that the case was so desperate," he said with contrition. "First of all, you must let me make your father a loan sufficient to cover all needs, the payments on the house and furniture, the little outstanding bills, enough to cure Ed and to run on. No one outside the family has a better right than I to do this, and no one would be so glad."

"I know," she returned. "You are very delicate, too, to offer to make the loan to father, but I'd rather you would lend it to me, for I have determined to become the business man of the family."

"Just as you like," agreed Phillip. "How much shall you need?"

She handed him a little slip of paper upon which the amounts were already set down and totaled. The sum was pitifully small in view of all the vast sums which Phillip had at his disposal.

"I don't think it wise for you to confine this to actual necessities," he urged. "It would be much better to take a larger sum, one that would cover all emergencies."

Elsie shook her head firmly. "No," she said. "I have already allowed a small leeway. The less I can make the burden the better I shall feel about it, for it must all be paid back. Please let me have my own way."

"I don't see how I can do otherwise," replied Phillip, giving her the money. She took it, gulping down a little lump which rose in her throat, then said with a pretty little assumption of business:

"I want you to write out a note for me to sign."

Without protest Phillip did so and put the note carefully away.

"Now we come back to the question of employment," said he. "You mentioned a while ago your father's gardening hobby. Do you suppose he would take a position in that line?"

"A month ago he would not, but now he would gratefully. If you can get him such a place it would perhaps solve our problem."

"I believe that I can," mused Phillip. "Just wait a minute," and he wrote a note, inclosing it in an addressed envelope, which he handed to her. "If your father will take this note to the address on the envelope I am quite certain they will make a place for him."

"I don't know how to thank you," she said. "You will have to take it for granted."

He took her warm hand in his own, and if in that moment he had obeyed the impulse that was in his heart, if he had spoken the words that strove to rush upon his lips, the whole course of his life might have been changed—for the better. But again ambition, which grimly forbade any clog upon his movements, interfered, and he held her hand with the tenderness of a brother—no more!

"Really, Elsie, I wish I could have done more for you," he said. "I want you to promise me that if you get into difficulties of any sort you will let me smooth them out for you."

"I have no one else to go to," she replied simply. "Do you know how much suffering there is in the world?" she suddenly asked him.

"I suppose there is a great deal of it."

"Do you understand what suffering is?"

"I do," he returned. "I had my share of it—of illness, of poverty, of cold and hunger, of uncleanliness, of the social degradation that belongs with want of money. I know these things not as one emerging from them, but as one cast down among them from luxury. Some people that experience softens, others it hardens and makes bitter. Sometimes I think it had that latter effect with me."

"It must not be!" she said earnestly. "Phillip, what has happened to my family has happened to three-fourths of the people in Hampton, which, as you may or may not know, is composed entirely of poor people, workmen who in better times try to buy their own homes. In that village of four or five thousand people there are perhaps one half of them facing actual starvation at this minute."

"Yes?" inquired Phillip, waiting.

"There are hundreds and hundreds of other villages like Hampton, where thousands upon thousands are in the same condition. Things were never so bad as they are now."

"Yes?" he asked again.

"They say—they say"—she halted and stopped, and then, with her face coloring, she stumbled on—"they say that you brought on this panic and that you could stop it. It isn't true, is it?"

"In a measure I suppose it is," admitted Phillip. "The condition was like a pile of loose gunpowder at the side of a railroad track, where constantly passing engines are sending up sparks. One spark was sure to land in that gunpowder and explode it. I merely happened to be the spark, but with no more power than that spark to stop the subsequent destruction."

She recoiled from him with dilating eyes. "It is true, then?" she said.

"I suppose it is, even in the way you look at it, but I assure you, Elsie, that it was necessary. Out of this better times will result, and better times could not be reached except through this devastation. It is like a surgical operation, which, painful and cruel as it may seem at the start, is necessary to save the rest of the body from death and decay."

She shook her head. "I cannot understand it, but then I suppose I could never have been a surgeon."

He smiled and laid his hand upon her shoulder. "No, I don't think you could."

She winced under that touch and glance, not because they were repulsive to her—oh, not because of that!—but because they were the touch and glance of a brother.

Rensselaer was announced just then, and the interview closed.

In Phillip's touring car, big Sam up beside the chauffeur, Kelvin and Rensselaer bowled along a pleasant country road, with the latter young gentleman in a state of stupefaction.

"To Forest Lakes!" Rensselaer exclaimed for at least the twentieth time. "Why, you old fox, you never said a word about ever having known Henry Breed or of ever having been to Forest Lakes!"

"I didn't dare," answered Phillip. "I didn't want my panic to come on too soon, which it would have done had my connection with Breed been known."

"How did you happen to fall in with the old boy?"

"Hunted him up!" said Phillip, with sudden fire. "As you know, this same crowd, of whom Pellman was at that time the head, led my father into a carefully prepared stock deal. It was as deliberate a plucking as any greenhorn ever got at the hands of a lot of confidence men, and it not only broke his purse, but it broke his heart. It left him without ambition, and when he died he left me absolutely penniless. Even as a boy I planned to get even, but I knew I must wait. Down south the chance came. I made that oil strike, then luck poured in on me, and I began at last to make a lot of money. One day about a year ago I read in a paper of Breed's anger against this same Wall street coterie. I had formed some good acquaintances down there, and among them was a man who knew Breed personally. He gave me a letter of introduction. I then went to see Breed and proposed this plan. He returned an evasive answer, and I went back south. Shortly after I returned there, however, I discovered that Breed had put into operation the system by which I suggested he drain the country of its currency. I discovered, too, that there were spies watching me and delving into my entire past history. I said nothing, but I made up my mind then that my time had come. Sure enough, Breed finally sent for me. He had employed over fifty men for nearly a year to examine every instant of my career, and he was satisfied. I spent a week at Forest Lakes evolving the plan in detail, and—you know the rest."

"It's a wonderful thing!" declared Rensselaer, with a long breath. "It's a romance!"

"There is more romance in modern business life than there was in the days of lance and shield," declared Phillip.

They had now reached the stone wall that surrounded Forest Lakes and were admitted unchallenged. At the door old Wilkins met Phillip, but he was no more than within when there was a rustle of silk in the hall and Lillian came eagerly forward to meet him.

"I understand," she said warmly, "that you are the conquering hero."

"I have done what I was told to do."

"But you have done it well. Now it is time that you came home to get your reward."

"I have been fairly well rewarded as it is," he replied. "By the way, I have brought with me an old friend of yours."

She turned and almost frowned as they were joined by young Rensselaer, who had stopped a moment to get something from the car.

"We are glad to see you again, Mr. Rensselaer," she said. "Mrs. Rensselaer has been expecting you for several days and, like a dutiful nephew, you must pay your respects to her at once. You will find her in her own apartments."

"I will see you later, Bert," Kelvin called after him as he went up the stairs. Then to Lillian, "Where is Mr. Breed?"

"He is just trying to make the eighth hole out back of the stables, and I think he must be at about the hundredth stroke for it," she laughed. "I will go out and bring him while you remove the dust. Go right up to your old rooms; they have been waiting for you ever since you were here the other time. They were becoming very lonesome for you."

Sam passed them in the hall with the luggage.

"When you get the luggage into Mr. Kelvin's room, Sam," directed Lillian, "you will find Lucy waiting for you in the kitchen."

Phillip turned into his apartments with a feeling of relief. He was very glad to rest for awhile from the turmoil of the financial crowd, to leave all the nervous tension of that tremendous tragedy behind him. Sam opened the luggage and put it away and had just gone down the back stairs when there came a timid knock at the door. Phillip opened it to a maid who had come with towels and stepped back in surprise.

"Elsie!" he cried.

"Why, Phillip!" exclaimed Elsie. "I didn't know you were to be here."

"Nor I you," said he. "How does it come about?"

"That letter you gave to father," she explained. "I came with him, applied for a place as maid and got it. Father is head gardener, thanks to you, and is perfectly happy. We are both doing very nicely. Did Miss Lillian know that it was you who were to occupy these rooms?"

"Why, certainly," replied Phillip. "I was here before."

Elsie said nothing, but she wondered. Lillian had seen Phillip's letter to her grandfather; in fact, Elsie had used it, after it had served its purpose for her father, as an introduction for herself, and she felt sure that it had secured her the place. Moreover, Lillian had casually asked about Phillip, and Elsie had told in glowing terms how good he was, yet Lillian had never mentioned that she knew him, and even now, when she told Elsie to bring the towels to this room, she did not mention Phillip's name.

"Does she treat you nicely?" Phillip suddenly demanded.

"Oh, yes; very nicely, indeed," she replied. And Phillip knew that she was not telling him all the truth. "We are all getting on well now," she said. "Grace has brought her children to live with us, and with what father and I earn we can do splendidly. We can even save a little money."

"I am glad of that," he said and stopped, not knowing what else to say.

CASA VERDUGO

Mrs. Zoberlein of Los Angeles is making her home at the Pepper Tree Inn temporarily, enjoying the quietness and homelike atmosphere of that pleasant resort.

The new kitchen, built by Mr. Sowl in connection with the Casa Verdugo restaurant is completed and has been occupied for the past week, relieving the congestion brought about by the conversion of a private house into a public place of entertainment. The new building is about forty feet square with cement floor, well lighted and supplied with all the requirements of a first-class kitchen where Spanish dishes are decocted by several cooks, and is a model of cleanliness.

The Schroeder property on the corner of Sixth street and Stocker, consisting of ten acres of land, has been sold to Mr. Tucker, who, it is understood, will subdivide it into half acre and acre lots, for which there is a growing demand. The property brought $18,000.

The Pepper Tree Inn found its quarters none too large for the accommodations of the numerous patrons who came out from Los Angeles last Sunday.

Judge Stanley Smith in the Superior Court in Los Angeles the other day decided the case of Senora Piedad Yorba y Sowl versus the P. E. Railway Co. in favor of the plaintiff. Senora Sowl ran the Casa Verdugo restaurant under lease from the P. E. until a few months ago when the company refused to renew the lease and went into the restaurant business itself, putting a high-class chef from Santa Barbara in charge. Senora Sowl then moved into her own casa near by and continued the business independent of the railroad company, the latter continuing to give to the resort its original title "Casa Verdugo," which as it had been copyrighted by the lady, seemed to her an infringement of her rights, a view evidently shared by the court. Whether this settles the matter for all time we are not informed, but the judgment was given by the judge without leaving the bench.

Mrs. A. F. Priest, a young married woman who has with her husband been a resident of Casa Verdugo for some months past, died last Thursday from scarlet fever. She was only ill two days and the shock is a severe one to husband and friends. The funeral occurred on Friday.

The following letters are advertised at the Casa Verdugo postoffice: Mrs. P. Worth, Mrs. Arthur Johnson, Mrs. Edw. Reinert.

Mrs. C. A. Sowl, whose health has not been good for some weeks past, is now confined to bed, but with a good prospect of soon assuming her daily duties after trying the "rest cure" at home.

Parent-Teachers' Association

On Friday last the members of the Sixth Street School Parent-Teachers' Association held a very interesting and important meeting. An excellent address was rendered by Mrs. A. M. Lord of Los Angeles who spoke on the maternity hospital in the city.

The committee on the new playgrounds was glad to report the completing of their work and the fact that the new grounds were in use, which greatly relieves the congested condition which existed.

Election of officers then followed. Dr. Jessie A. Russell was elected president; Mrs. John Hunchberger first vice president; Mrs. Robert P. McMullen second vice president; Mrs. Harry Hall secretary; Mrs. E. S. McKee, treasurer.

A number of visitors were present and the afternoon closed with the serving of light refreshments and a very pleasant social hour.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.

Mr. J. Andrews, of 439 East Sixth street, met with a serious accident last Monday evening while riding a motorcycle. Mrs. G. W. Lynn left on Tuesday morning for a visit to her old home in Norway, expecting to be absent three months. She will stop at one or two places en route before sailing. Mrs. Lynn has not seen the home of her girlhood for seventeen years.

SHAVER'S GROCERY

"A Little Store Well Filled."

A GREAT SUCCESS

Odd Fellows hall on Fourth street a number of ladies acted in the same capacity and visiting ladies showed their appreciation of the opportunity afforded to rest in the interval between events.

Sports.

There were two snappy games of baseball for the entertainment of visitors, one at the High School grounds between the Jewel City team and the Ferris Hartman combination, the score being 7 to 5 in favor of the visitors.

The other was at Verdugo Park where the home team beat the Pasadena Stars in a battling game by a score of 8 to 3. The other sports as per program were a great success, affording entertainment for a brief hour to the thousands who witnessed them. The prizes in these contests were awarded as follows:

Small Boys Race—1st prize, Albert Townsend. 2nd prize, Leroy Volkhardt.

Firty-yard dash—First prize, McElroy; second, Taylor.

100-Yard Dash—1st prize, Arthur Taylor. 2nd prize, Frank Moser.

The Speaking.

The speaking began at 3:30, Mr. J. W. Usilton, president of the Improvement Association, acting as chairman, introducing the speakers.

Mr. John Robert White, Jr., mayor of Glendale, welcomed the visitors.

Hon. Lee Gates delivered the principal address and it was up to that gentleman's high standard. Rev. J. H. Henry was at his best and his speech was heartily appreciated. Mr. Andrew Park, editor of the Los Angeles Independent, also made an eloquent speech. It was hoped that Lieut. Gov. Wallace would be present, but he could not come. The absence of Mr. Mattison B. Jones was also regretted.

Grand Marshal Miller (the man on horseback) filled his position well, his gorgeous outfit attracting general admiration.

The cars between Glendale and Verdugo Park did a rushing business all day.

A fair estimate of the crowd present is 7000.

The Glendale Band, under the leadership of Mr. Thorp, furnished the music for the day, and in both quality and quantity left nothing to be desired.

FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH.

Corner Louise and Third streets.

The "Mothers' Day" services last Sunday were largely attended. The Sunday school was crowded, as usual. To each one attending was given the mother's flower, a white carnation, by the "Flower Mission" class. The church was beautifully decorated with carnations and white roses.

The B. Y. P. U. is growing in attendance and interest. The topic next Sunday evening will be "Growing Into Larger Work." The meeting is held one hour before evening preaching service, 6:30. All young people are invited.

The regular monthly meeting of the Women's Aid Society has been postponed until next Thursday, May 25, at 2:30 p. m.

Next Sunday evening the pastor will begin a series of sermons for young people, as follows: May 21, "Friendship"; May 28, "Courtship"; June 4, "Marriage"; June 11, Children's Day exercises; June 18, "The Home." While these sermons will be prepared especially for young people, the older people will not find them unprofitable. Evening service at 7:30.

Mrs. Field, with her daughter and friend, has been extensively entertained in Glendale, Los Angeles and Hollywood. Mr. and Mrs. Field gave a charming dinner in honor of their cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne, of Chicago, who were about to return home after a long stay at Pasadena. Mr. and Mrs. Carl Osborne, of 900 Oak street, Los Angeles, were present. On the 10th inst. Mr. and Mrs. Osborne left for a trip around the world. The table and drawing room on this occasion were decorated with most beautiful wild flowers and carnations, which were the admiration of the stranger guests.

CORRECTION.

Our account last week of the Tuesday Afternoon Club's program on California Day was incomplete in that it unintentionally omitted mention of the reading of John S. McGroarty's splendid poem, "Just California," by Mrs. J. C. Danford. The poem was particularly applicable to the day, and was read by Mrs. Danford in a manner that gave great pleasure to the audience.

THE WEATHER.

The high fogs continue to prevail and the lack of the usual sunshine gives an unpleasant chilliness to the atmosphere. Sunday last there was quite a heavy rainfall in some places in the mountains and in the neighborhood of Old Baldy. At Pomona the rainfall was 1.38 inches, at Monrovia .61. There was a slight sprinkle in this section, not enough to measure.

O. intend to give at some time in the near future, possibly not until fall, a "Chamber of Commerce" exhibit in Glendale, at which the merchants are expected to make exhibits as on a previous similar occasion. CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION MEETING.

There will be a union Christian Endeavor rally of the Tropico and Glendale Chirstian Endeavorers, to be held in the Central Christian church, Sixth and Louise streets, Glendale, on Sunday evening, May 21, at 7 o'clock. Wiggins, of Los Angeles, county tenth legion superintendent; Rolph M. Byram, of Los Angeles, county floating superintendent; Richard E. Small, of Los Angeles, county president. A very interesting program has been arranged, and all interested in Christian Endeavor work are invited to attend.

CASA VERDUGO M. E. CHURCH.

There was a good attendance at last Sunday's service, and great interest manifested in the service. The pastor, Rev. C. R. Norton, will preach as usual next Sunday at 11 a. m. On the 28th he will preach a Memorial Day sermon, and members of the G. A. R. in particular are invited to attend.

The party enjoyed a moonlight ride on the lagoon and an exciting trip on the aerial railway, besides other attractions with pink lemonade and peanuts on the side, and a very pleasant outing in general.

New arrivals keep pouring into Glendale continually, West Glendale coming in for its share of the population. Among the newest ones to arrive is little Miss Rockhold of Burchett street, who up to the present time is greatly in love with her surroundings and thinks her papa and mamma and two little brothers about the most congenial people to live with, and has announced the fact that she intends to make her home with them.

Mr. F. A. Wilkin of Los Angeles is erecting a story and a half building on Central avenue, and Fourth street, which will contain on the ground floor one store room with two living rooms in the rear, and the upper floor will be devoted to living rooms alone. It will be known as the "Bungalow Store" and will be fitted with a supply of general merchandise. PHENOMENAL TIME.

It is difficult for the mind to realize the wonderful speed attained by Bob Burman when he made a mile in 25.40 seconds at Daytona, on his Blitzen Benz. This is a new world's record that is likely to stand for a long time and means a speed of 141.73 miles an hour. It again shows that the motor car has no serious rival as a speed agent.

The new mark is just ten miles an hour better than Barney Oldfield's best record, and is the fastest speed yet attained by man. At this rate Burman would cover the route from Chicago to New York in 6 hours and 53 minutes, compared to which the 18 hours of the Twentieth Century Limited looks slow indeed.

AN ELECTRIC RAILWAY FOR SAN FERNANDO.

A strong combination of capitalists with Mr. L. C. Brand as president has been formed for the purpose of building an electric railway from a point near Van Nuys to San Fernando. The Suburban Homes Company is building a road along its 230 foot boulevard to the Lankershim Ranch line at the base of the mountains, nine miles from Van Nuys. From a point on this line about two miles from the town of Van Nuys, there will be a branch leading to San Fernando, nine miles distant northward. No time is specified for the completion of the line.

LIBRARY NOTES.

It has been decided by the library board that in future it will be more convenient for both patrons and librarians for each patron to have charge of his own membership card, that is, to have it in his own possession while not in use, instead of in the care of the librarian. This will deprive no one of privileges which have been accorded, but will insure much quicker service. Those who have not their cards are requested to call for them as soon as convenient.
